What You Should Know About Hearing Loss – A Candid Discussion

Funny until it happens to you.

Difficulty in clearly distinguishing consonants, particularly in noisy environments such as restaurants, conference halls and meeting rooms, is a common sign of mild to moderate hearing difficulty. It will happen to most of us—if we live long enough.

Fortunately, new hearing technologies allow audiologists to diagnose and compensate for common hearing loss with natural-sounding, virtually invisible instruments that are comfortable to wear yet highly effective.

Learn more. Attend our free hearing seminar where the latest technologies are presented with the opportunity to have all of your questions answered. Meet others such as yourself that have faced and resolved similar hearing difficulties for a more effective working life and a more enjoyable social life.

Airyn Cristiano, M.S., CCC-A
